President's Message

Compatriots,

I am excited that our chapter will have a new leadership team in place as of the May luncheon. I am confident that the new team is capable and competent and will do a fine job of leading our chapter into the future. I am also confident that the membership will support them in their activities as they have me and my team and I want to thank each and everyone one of you for your support in the past and your continued support in the future. I also must pay special praise for each and every member of the executive committee for their support, guidance, and good judgment.

May God bless each of you and our Chapter.

Robert "Bob" Humker, President

Alexander Milliner - Old Survivor of the Revolution

Mr. Milliner was born at Quebec on the 14th of March, 1760.

While he was yet young, his mother, - whom her son describes as "English, high larnt, understood all languages, had been a teacher," - removed with him to New York, where, becoming acquainted with a man by the name of Maroney, a well-to-do mason, she married him. This explains the circumstance of Mr. Milliner's name appearing on the pension roll as "Alexander Maroney," - his step-father, by whom, on account of his youth, he was enlisted, doing it under his own name. The enlistment, Mr. Milliner

BREVARD CHAPTER President General's Report

Announcement of the Execution of the Final Contract

History

In 2014 King's College London approached PG Lindsey Brock about the SAR sponsoring a visiting professor to review a discovery of new documents found in the Round Tower at Windsor Castle. These documents were papers from King George III, as well as four other kings of that era, with the bulk being from George III. In return for a payment of $38,600 per year the SAR would pay for a professor to travel to London and work on these archives with the idea of ultimately cataloging and digitizing them for publication.

This would be a five year project with the total payment being $193,000 if we remained as a sponsor for the entire five years. In return for our sponsorship King's College would use their best efforts to provide publicity for us, encourage the visiting professors to continue their contact with the SAR and give consideration to allowing any papers of King George III that are exhibited in the USA to be done in conjunction with an SAR Congress.

I would consider the obligations on the part of King's College under this original proposal to be aspirational instead of contractual. While KCL may aspire to attain those goals there was no firm obligation on their part under the proposed contract. I opposed the project because of the loose language in the agreement and because there were no guarantees as to what may be discovered in the papers that relate to the Revolutionary War. They stated that there were some 350,000 documents and that in their initial survey of a small percentage of the papers there was little they found that would be relevant to our mission. I thought $193,000 was a lot of money for us to spend on a project that would potentially yield us little in return either in the way of new members, publicity or increased funding.

Michael Elston (VA) had been appointed by PG Brock to work with KCL and so to insure continuity I continued that appointment. At the Fall Leadership meeting he presented the program to the Trustees and asked that they vote to enter into the agreement with KCL and fund the payments. During the discussion several proponents stated that they believed money could be raised privately to fund the first 2 years, with two compatriots stating that they had commitments to cover the first payment of $38,600. The Trustees then voted 40 to 23 to enter into the agreement with KC and stated that the money would come from both the SAR Foundation and the SAR operating fund. I objected to the terms of the contract and asked that if they wanted me to sign the proposed agreement that they direct me to sign it as I did not want anyone to think I signed such a poor contract voluntarily. The Trustees did vote to do that and also asked that I attempt to renegotiate the contract and when I was satisfied that I had the most favorable terms available that I then sign the contract.

What Happened Next?

In October I began working on a new draft of the agreement and began discussing possible changes with KCL. I submitted a new version of the contract and it was accepted by KCL with a few minor modifications. The contract was executed on February 15, 2016. I believe the new contract is vastly improved and provides us with guarantees instead of promises. Specifically the new contract provides for the following guarantees that were not contractual obligations under the original contract:

- 1) Visiting Professors will be selected by KCL just as in the original agreement but now the selection list will be determined by an SAR committee made up of SAR members and one KCL representative who will submit a list of between 3 and 5 applicants to KCL who will select the Visiting Professor from that list. The original agreement would allow the SAR to make recommendations but KCL would develop the list of candidates and make the selection.

- 2) KCL will require in their contract with the Visiting Professor that the professor write a paper to be submitted to the SAR on their work with these papers. They must also be available to speak at SAR national and state events. For any paper submitted by the professor to the SAR for publication, the SAR will maintain the copyright although the SAR agrees to grant a license to the author, KCL and the Royal collection Trust for non-commercial use. Under the original agreement KCL only agreed to communicate their expectation to the professor but that was not binding only aspirational.

- 3) If there are discoveries and KCL puts together a traveling exhibit then they agree to give the SAR the right to display that exhibit at our headquarters in Louisville for at least 120 days. The contract now states that KCL will include SAR members in any events where the papers are exhibited in the United States. The original agreement only provided that consideration would be given to scheduling an exhibit so that it coincides with an Annual Congress and it said KCL would use its best efforts to include SAR members in any exhibits of the papers. Aspirational phrases such as consider and best efforts have now been converted to contractual obligations.

4) KCL will have a representative report to the SAR Congresses that occur during the life of this agreement on the status of the project. There was no provision such as this in the original contract.

5) KCL will send out at least two press releases per year to top media markets in the United States discussing this project as well as any significant discoveries and the involvement of the SAR. The original agreement simply said that any press releases about the project issued to priority US markets will include the involvement of the SAR. There was no requirement that any press releases be issued by KCL.

6) If KCL does digitize any of the papers then they must provide those papers to the SAR in a digital format at least 120 days prior to them being made available to the public on the internet. We also have an exclusive for 200 miles around our library. This means if someone within 200 miles of Louisville wants to view these documents they will have to come to our library during this 120 day period. The original agreement said that KCL, where possible would provide the digital images, and that they would attempt to do this as early as possible.

These were the major changes I negotiated. The First Lady Mickey Jo, who is also an attorney, was a great help in this process. The first payment to KCL is due March 1, 2016. I have appointed a King's College Visiting Professor committee, chaired by PG Joe Dooley (VA), to develop the proposed list of visiting professors to submit to KCL and to work with the visiting professors both during and after their time at KCL. Mike Elston (VA) will serve as the chairman of the King's College Project committee so any questions about the operation of the program should be directed to him.

I am still opposed to our involvement in this project because I think it is unlikely we will get our money's worth out of this in terms of publicity, new members or increased donations. If there are some significant discoveries then we will contribute to the knowledge of this time in our history and perhaps it will be worth it. Part of my opposition was because of the way in which the original contract was written but I am much happier with the new version and I think it offers more protection for us. But at this time I can see many other uses for that money that will directly contribute to achieving our mission. However, the Trustees have made their decision so we must all try and make this a success.

If you want to be a part of this project or if you want to make a donation please contact Mike Elston. If you are a state or chapter president please forward this to your state society and chapter members. Thank you.

Wreaths Across

America

Our chapter is a registered group with Wreaths Across America for remembering and honoring veterans laid to rest all over the country by raising funds to sponsor wreaths.

- The Wreaths that we sponsor are shipped to the selected cemetery for the ceremony on the second Saturday in December.

This year we received donations for $360 (24 wreaths) as of the deadline. In return, we will be getting $120 as part of this fund-raising effort. Compatriot Williams went to the Edgewater Cemetery and took part in that ceremony once again by reading the SAR President General's Proclamation before the assembled crowd.

Once the Holiday season is over, we can begin to submit funds to have wreaths for next December's ceremony at a cemetery of our choice. We don't need to wait until the Fall to begin this effort - it's a year long opportunity. Send your check payable to Wreaths Across America to S Williams, 3403 Caraway ST, Cocoa FL 32926.

Skirmish at Barren Hill

A Summary of Events Leading to the
May 20, 1778 Clash of Forces

In March 1778, the 20-year-old Marquis de Lafayette was the newly appointed commander of the American Army's Northern Department. Washington's forces were stationed at Valley Forge, Pa., while the British army was wintering at nearby Philadelphia. Washington asked Lafayette to recruit Native allies in anticipation of a spring movement of the armies.

The Oneidas had long-standing ties of friendship with the French, and Lafayette's presence seemed to make the possibility of French aid on the American side more likely. They adopted Lafayette and gave him the name of a warrior who had died 12 years earlier, Kayewla, during a meeting at Johnstown, N.Y. in early March 1778. As was the custom on such occasions, Lafayette accompanied his request for Oneida warriors with wampum belts, which testified to the truth and importance of his message, and some money for the Oneida people to buy the foreign goods they had come to depend upon.

In his own accounts of this meeting, Lafayette indicated his belief that the Oneidas had accepted his gifts as a bribe. But the Oneida tradition in dealing with the Europeans called for token exchanges of gifts to acknowledge past actions of friendship and anticipate future cooperation. These exchanges also were important because the Oneidas did not receive regular pay for their military service.

On May 13, 1778, 47 Oneidas arrived at Valley Forge, accompanied by Lafayette's men. Washington, expecting the British troops to evacuate Philadelphia, put Lafayette in command of 2,200 men to find out what the British were planning. He ordered Lafayette to avoid unnecessary risks and stay on the move. The Oneidas were assigned to a special detachment of scouts to advance Lafayette's troops, and the entire column left Valley Forge on May 19.

For reasons that aren't clear, Lafayette stopped that night at Barren Hill, about 12 miles from Philadelphia, and set up camp. He then sent out the Oneida and American scouts to reconnoiter.

The British, who outnumbered the American contingent by four-to-one, were fully aware of Lafayette's encampment and marched out of Philadelphia on the night of May 19 to encircle the American forces. Generals Clinton and Howe, with what is usually described as a substantial or sizeable force, were advancing directly on Barren Hill on Ridge Road. The American left flank, specifically that of Poor's brigade, rested near St. Peter's Church, and troops used the churchyard wall for protection. Although Barren Hill involved little combat, inside St. Peter's Church there had already been a small battle involving flying rodents. At the time, it was an abandoned building, and the soldiers and some of their Oneida Indian allies created their own entertainment. Joseph Plumb Martin wrote,

"The Indians were amusing themselves and the soldiers by shooting with their bows, in and about the church. I observed something in a corner of the roof which did not appear to belong to the building, and desired an Indian who was standing near me to shoot an arrow at it. He did so and it proved to be a cluster of bats; I should think there were nearly a bushel of them, all hanging upon one another. The house was immediately alive with them, and it was likewise instantly full of Indians and soldiers. The poor bats fared hard; it was sport for all hands. They killed I know not how many, but there was a great slaughter among them. I never saw so many bats before or since, nor indeed in my whole life put all together."

The Oneidas and their American counterparts met the front of one of the British columns sometime on the morning of May 20 and immediately engaged the mounted infantry in a brief but bloody skirmish. Louis de Tousard, a Frenchman who had accompanied the Oneidas from New York to Valley Forge, described the skirmish and the Oneidas' "ability in firing," adding that he owed "my liberty, perhaps more, to two Indians, and two French men who stood constantly by me."

The Oneidas and the Americans heard gunfire from some distance in their rear and realized that the British were threatening to surround them. They retreated from the scene of the skirmish, still firing and under heavy attack. The Oneidas were the last of Lafayette's troops to cross the Schuylkill River, and it was only this skirmish that alerted Lafayette to the danger of being outflanked by the British.

As it happened, Lafayette was warned in time and was able to make a quick retreat with minimal losses, and Washington publicly praised his tactic as "timely and handsome." If not for the Oneida and American scouts bravely engaging the British, nearly a fifth of the American army might have been lost.

Make your S.A.R. Membership Statement

S.A.R. Branding effort has developed a means by which the S.A.R. Is more recognizable to the general public. This will be accomplished by the wearing of a new S.A.R. Pin - Similar to the DAR pin that their members wear which gives them immediate recognition as a member of the DAR. Our rosette is very nice and evokes General George Washington as it is explained in the Induction ceremony but the general public does not know what it is or means - S.A.R. membership. The new pin will go a long way to improving our recognition.

In order to make it more efficient and to minimize shipping expenses, the SAR Foundation has asked if we could collect our purchase of this item at one central point You will be able to see what the pins look like and more information on page 15 of the new SAR Magazine.

The pins are available for $10. Each chapter should take an order of their members who want the pin and collect $10 for each pin, then write a check from your chapter for the amount of pins you want and mail it to Headquarters.

Hopefully, chapter officers will choose to order a pin and wear it whenever and wherever they are in public.

Consider this a Christmas or New Years gift for yourself. Send your $10 check to Carroll Lord, 830 Thrasher Dr., Viera FL 32955.

says, was at New York; though the record of the Pension Office gives it at Lake George. The pension roll, too, gives ninety-four years as Mr. Milliner's age. This is manifestly an error of ten years; since the battle of Quebec, the fall before his birth, occurred on the 13th of September, 1759. On the 14th of March, of the present year, therefore, Mr. Milliner was one hundred and four years old.

Too young at the time of his enlistment for service in the ranks, he was enlisted as drummer boy; and in this capacity he served four years, in Washington's Life Guard. He was a great favorite, he says, with the Commander-in-Chief, who used frequently, after the beating of the reveille, to come along and pat him on the head, and call him his boy. On one occasion, "a bitter cold morning," he gave him a drink out of his flask. One day the General sent for me to come up to headquarters. 'Tell him,' he sent word, 'that he needn't fetch his drum with him.' I was glad of that. The Life Guard came out and paraded, and the roll was called. There was one Englishman, Bill Dorchester; the General said to him, 'Come, Bill, play up this 'ere Yorkshire tune.' When he got through, the General told me to play. So I took the drum, overhauled her, braced her up, and played a tune. The General put his hand in his pocket and gave me three dollars; then one and another gave me more - so I made out well; in all, I got fifteen dollars. I was glad of it: my mother wanted some tea, and I got the poor old woman some." His mother accompanied the army as washer-woman, for the sake of being near her boy.

Mr. Milliner was at the battles of White Plains, Brandywine, Saratoga, Monmouth, Yorktown, and some others. At Monmouth he received a flesh wound in his thigh. He was at the encampment at Valley Forge. At Yorktown he shook hands with Cornwallis. He describes him as "a fine looking man; very mild. The day after the surrender, the Life Guard came up. Of the Indian warfare in the Mohawk valley, Mr. Milliner has broken recollections

In all, Mr. Milliner served six years and a half in the army. He still has the little tin case, in which in the old days of British seizure and search, he used to carry his protection papers. The papers themselves are lost.

At the age of thirty-nine, Mr. Milliner married Abigail Barton, aged eighteen; and, settled in Cortlandt county,

New York. For sixty-two years he and his wife lived together, without a death in the family or a coffin in the house. At the time of his wife's death, Mr. Milliner was still able to cultivate his garden; his age being one hundred and two years.

He has been throughout life full of jokes; in the army he was the life of the camp; could dance and sing, and has always taken the world easily, "nothing troubling him over five minutes at a time," care finding it impossible to fasten itself upon him, and so, after trial, letting him alone. His spirits have always been buoyant, nothing depressing him.

Mention has been made of his wound at the battle of Monmouth. At another time a bullet passed through the head of his drum. At the time his photograph was taken he could still handle his drum, playing for the artist with excellent time and flourishes which showed him to have been a master of the art.

In size, he is small, more so than his picture would indicate. Though never robust, his health has always been good.

Upon his last birthday (his one hundred and fourth), the Pioneers of Monroe county - a veteran association whose headquarters are at Rochester - went out in a body to Adam's Basin, to pay their respects to their aged associate. Arrived at the Basin, and marching in procession to the house where the old man resides, he appeared upon the steps, and was greeted with cheers. After many had shaken hands with him, the procession was re-formed, the old man heading it, and marched to the church, where, after the singing of Washington's Funeral Hymn by the Pioneers and a short historical address, Mr. Milliner stood up on a seat where all could see him, and thanking them for their kind attention, appealed to them all to be true to their country, saying that he had seen "worse looking visages than his own hung up by the neck."
